BlackBerry Desktop Software supports synchronization of data between your Mac and your BlackBerry smartphone, and BlackBerry tablet. Key features: Sync your contacts and appointments: Your contacts, calendar appointments, tasks and notes are all able to be synchronized with Mac apps such as Microsoft Entourage and iCal. Back up, restore and manage apps: You can transfer data between BlackBerry smartphones, back up and restore information either manually or automatically and add or remove apps. Music sync: The app makes it easy to sync iTunes playlists, music from a specific artist or genre, a favourite video or a mix of music. BlackBerry media/photo and video sync: Import new photos and videos captured on your BlackBerry device to iPhoto and sync iPhoto albums or events to your device. You can also use the device switch wizard to migrate from one BlackBerry device to another. Important Notice: BlackBerry will no longer be providing updates, including security updates, for BlackBerry Desktop Software. There will be no technical support available. Research In Motion (RIM) recently announced that it will finally release Macintosh-compatible desktop management software for BlackBerry handhelds this fall. I was lucky enough to get a quick hands-on demonstration this morning from RIM Product Manager Andrew Feldman at an event in New York City, and I dug up a few previously unannounced tidbits about RIM's upcoming software release for Apple computer users with BlackBerries. BlackBerry Desktop Software Add/Remove Apps on Mac First of all, the Mac-version of BlackBerry Desktop Manager, or BlackBerry Desktop Software, its official name, will not ship along with the brand new BlackBerry Curve 8520, as previously reported by quite a few news outlets and blogs. Apparently there was some confusing language on RIM's website that suggested otherwise, but it has been modified to clarify that the software's expected some time in September. Secondly, BlackBerry Desktop Software for Mac is mostly aimed at consumer users—and rightly so, as Macs still represent only a small percentage of enterprise PC deployments. That means the software won't have many of the corporate-mail/Outlook/Notes/etc. settings available within the PC-version of BlackBerry Desktop Manager. Specifically, there will be no Entourage/Outlook settings available to tweak or modify. (Think: e-mail signatures, reconciliation settings.) "We've worked very hard to ensure that all the sync features are there," according to Feldman. The real focus in the first release of RIM's new Mac software is really on consumers and their syncing needs, he says. BlackBerry Desktop Software Calendar Sync Screen BlackBerry Desktop Software for Mac will be compatible with Apple PCs running Mac OS Leopard 10.5.5 and higher. And users will need to be running BlackBerry device software version 4.2 or higher to employ it, Feldman says. Last but not least, there's no easy way to load "leaked" software on your BlackBerry device via BlackBerry Desktop Software for Mac, according to Feldman. This is particularly interesting, because BlackBerry users with PCs can currently load just about any sort of compatible BlackBerry files via BlackBerry Desktop Manager's App Loader component. Feldman wouldn't get into details on how the "blocking" process might work, but he did say there's something in the Mac version meant to dissuade users from loading unofficial software. I'm anxious to get my thumbs on BlackBerry Desktop Software for Mac, and though I wish it offered all the same capabilities of the PC version and more, I understand why RIM decided to leave some components out of the first build. On that note, this is only the first iteration of BlackBerry Desktop Software for Mac, and you can bet more full-featured versions will pop up in the months and years to come. ASPFRE CIO BlackBerry Newsletter Get better use out of your BlackBerry and keep up-to-date on the latest developments. Sign-up » I just got word from Research In Motion that it plans to release a new version of its BlackBerry Desktop Manager software for Apple's Mac OS X operating system in September. There aren't currently too many details available on the forthcoming release; however, RIM posted the following information on its Inside BlackBerry blog this morning: BlackBerry Desktop Software key features include: Sync your iTunes playlists, calendars, contacts, notes and tasks. Add/Remove applications. Update your device when new software becomes available. Backup and restore your device data with such features like automatically scheduled backups and optional encryption. Manage multiple devices. The software will reportedly support Mac OS X 10.5.5 and above. I grilled RIM on the subject of BlackBerry Desktop Manager support for Mac in 2008 and was told to expect some kind of solution this year. RIM already released a beta version of BlackBerry Media Sync for Mac earlier this year, which lets BlackBerry users sync music from their iTunes music libraries. And I recently queried the company's public relations manager on the subject of additional Mac-specific software, but was told that I'd hear from the company as soon as it could share additional information. I guess today's that day. On first glimpse, the Mac version appears to be able to perform all of the same core functions of the Windows-specific BlackBerry Desktop Manager, but we'll have to wait until more details become available—or beta version leaks—before we know for sure. One thing that isn't address is whether or not users will be able to modify BES mail settings, like they can with the Windows version. This is great news for BlackBerry users with Mac computers. Still, I must say, it's about #8%~&*time, RIM!! Click on over to RIM's Inside BlackBerry for screen shots.
